

What is this Document About?

This document is a guide to a report that the Rape Crisis Network Ireland did.

There is a bigger document, with much more information in it. You may need some support to read that document.

The report talks about people with disabilities and sexual violence. This means people who have had sexual contact against their wishes.

The report looks at the facts and figures about sexual violence and how people with disabilities compare to people without disabilities.

The report looks at the reasons that people do not talk about sexual violence.

The report looks at the ways that researchers get the information about sexual violence and how things are done in other countries.

The report also looks at changes that they believe would make things easier for people to talk about sexual violence.

They include

- Training
- Come up with rules about accessibility
- Look at what services exist and promote them

The report was written by Helen Bartlett and Elaine Mears for Rape Crisis Network Ireland and funded by the National Disability Authority.

This accessible document has been produced by Inclusion Ireland and proof read by people with intellectual disabilities.

European Easy-to-Read Logo: Inclusion Europe. More information at www.inclusion-europe.org/etr

